

POWER COMPANY PLANS BIG DAM PROJECT IN COLORADO RIVER AT DIAMOND CANYON

PHOENIX, Ariz., Jan. 12.—The Grand Canyon Power Development company has been active in the way of surveying, represented by J. E. Grand of Phoenix, an engineer who has explored the greater part of the gorge and who is believed to be the Arizona authority on the question of utilization of the Colorado's flow.

Survey for the company has been made of the possible dam sites. Three have been retained. One is at a point in the canyon 12 miles east of the mouth of Diamond creek. The second is immediately above the mouth of Diamond creek, the side canyon to be utilized for the placing of the power plant. The third is at Pecos's ferry, at the mouth of Grand Wash, about where the state plans to build a bridge across the Colorado, as a link in the projected Utah-Arizona highway.

It is said plans are about complete for the Diamond canyon project. This is less than 20 miles north of Pecos Springs station on the Santa Fe, the nearest railroad point to the canyon. The way to the river being down a gentle grade starting at Pecos Springs canyon. The damsite is said to be only a few hundred feet wide, with bedrock almost on the low water line, the black granite walls of the lower canyon rising on either side to about 200 feet from the river level. These projects, designed primarily for power generation, are not connected with the plans announced by the Edison company and irrigation interests for storage and power dams.

You can hardly go wrong with a good coffee.

If you make it too strong, it still has its smooth rich delightful taste.

But if you make ordinary coffee too strong, you get a rank harsh taste.

Besides, fine coffee is more economical than coffee that is merely cheap per pound—it makes so many cups.

Schilling Coffee is one of the two or three really fine coffees—all packed in vacuum-sealed tins.

Wings of the morning!

Through Sleepers To Help Mexican Trade

Houston, Texas, Jan. 12.—Establishment of through sleeping car service between Houston and Mexico City will help increase trade facilities between Mexico and Texas, said E. W. It is needless to say that this is another long step toward obtaining an additional percentage of the Mexican trade, which the United States so badly needs," said Mr. Eaton.
